

New England Workers Celebrate New Contract with Stop & Shop

Stop & Shop workers celebrate their successful bargaining campaign.

On Sunday, nearly 40,000 Stop & Shop supermarket workers represented by Locals 328, 371, 919, 1459, and 1445 in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut voted overwhelmingly to ratify new contracts with Ahold, Stop & Shop's Dutch-owned parent company.

The three-year agreement includes both immediate bonus pay and scheduled hourly raises over the next three years. The contract also improves access to affordable health care for part-time workers and strengthens retirement security for all 40,000 workers.

After voting to authorize a strike if no agreement could be reached, Stop & Shop workers received a groundswell of support from communities around the Northeast that spoke out to keep middle-class jobs in their neighborhoods. This support, along with the hard work of UFCW locals and their members, ensured the strong contract. OP

UFCW Local 770 Joins with Fresh & Easy Workers to Feed the Hungry

Glassell Park Fresh & Easy workers help UFCW members unload a truckload of Smithfield hams at the Los Angeles Regional Food Bank.

“Feeding the Hungry,” the UFCW and Smithfield Foods joint program to donate around 20 million servings of protein to food banks, is continuing its cross-country tour. The latest stop was the Los Angeles Central Food Bank, where members of UFCW Local 770 were joined by representatives from the Von’s grocery chain. It was also a unique opportunity for some non-member grocery workers. Workers from the Tesco Fresh & Easy store in Glassell Park who are organizing with the UFCW took part in the event as well.

“It was amazing to see the UFCW working side by side with these companies,” said Angel Salas, a worker at the Glassell Park Fresh & Easy. “It’s clear that the united members of the UFCW are a respected voice by these employers, and that this partnership is giving back to the communities. One day, we hope to have that kind of relationship with Fresh & Easy, where we are respected as partners.” OP

Local 653 Reaches Agreement with Major Grocery Firms

Local 653 President Raymond Sawicky discusses negotiations with the bargaining team.

UFCW Local 653, based in Plymouth, Minn., recently reached a three-year contract with major grocery employers in the Twin Cities area. The agreement covers about 20 employers, including Supervalu, Lund Food Holdings, and Fresh Seasons Market, and represents a victory for the more than 11,000 members of Local 653 who held the line on health care costs.

“This agreement allows us to maintain competitive wages, keeps our pension plan solvent, and lets our employers remain competitive against a growing number of non-union operators,” said Local 653 President Raymond Sawicky. “But most important in this tough environment is that we didn’t see an increase in health care costs for our members.”

The contract also includes a wage freeze and measures to preserve the solvency of pension plans and modernize work rules to allow employees to fill multiple roles. OP
